

It seems to be an invasion of privacy to read correspondence that is meant only for others, or for that matter, any monitoring of actions taken place by private citizens. There is a reasonable expectation of privacy that people can assume when using a computer. As soon as this becomes more integrated with different technology, this may change; at the current level, however there is no justifiable motive that can be used to monitor actions or communications that does not have severe civil rights draw backs. Thank you for your time.
